SOUTH INDIAN FILTER COFFEE

(2kcal / 150ml)

KAAPI

Typically consumed in the southern states of India, Kaapi is a household drink. A strong decoction is obtained by infusing hot water with finely ground coffee over a couple of hours.

The decoction is made by boiling hot milk and a dash of natural sweeteners served in a traditional utensil called dabara.

POUROVER

(2kcal / 240ml)

The inverted conical pourover design allows the coffee to rise and enables the CO2 release. The slow pour of water helps coffee release relevant flavour compounds at its own speed. Enjoy a perfect coffee bloom in this theatrical brewing session in a pure, natural and flavourful brew.

CHEMEX
(2kcal / 240ml)

Chemex filter paper absorbs the natural oils from coffee - a little bit of acidity, bitterness and off-notes. Chemex filter paper being thicker, absorbs more oils, thus giving us a lighter, cleaner cup of coffee. The brew is a liquid gold colour, that is perhaps the purest coffee flavour.

FRENCH PRESS

(2kcal / 240ml)

In a French Press, the coffee is steeped in hot water for about 4 minutes. The ground coffee is fully in contact with water and hence they are able to release more flavour, body and acidity.

SIPHON

(2kcal / 240ml)

Reminiscent of a chemistry lab apparatus, there's a lot of precision and careful handling of coffee in this brewer. This is perhaps one of the rare coffee makers with a cloth filter that helps filter all sediments and gives us a cleaner and brighter cup than other brewers. Coffee in a siphon is brewed at 'almost' boiling temperature. While the brewing time is less, but high temperature helps bring out more pronounced flavors from coffee.
